Economic and social impact submission

How an application is assessed

The Gambling Regulation Act 2003 provides the framework for assessing gaming machine applications. The Commission cannot approve an application unless it is satisfied that the applicant's proposal will not result in a 'net detriment' to the community in which the premises are located. Several elements can be relevant to the 'no net detriment' test. Part B of the application form guides you, as the relevant local Council, through a number of these elements and asks you for information or evidence about them.

If the application is to approve a premises for gaming, the Commission must also be satisfied that the premises are, or on completion of building works will be, suitable for the management and operation of gaming machines.

The application process

- You must notify the VCGLR whether you intend to make a submission within 37 days of being notified by the VCGLR about the submission.
- If you choose to make a submission, you must lodge it within 60 days of receiving the notification. You may request an extension from the VCGLR if exceptional circumstances exist that prevent you from making a submission within this period.
- The Commission will hear the application at a public hearing and make reasonable endeavours to decide it within 60 days of the VCGLR:
 - receiving a submission from you, the local council or
 - being notified by you that you will not make a submission.
- You will be invited to attend a public hearing and give evidence in support of your submission.
- You are free to communicate with the applicant during the application process.
- The Victorian Responsible Gambling Foundation (VRGF) may be able to provide information that will help you respond to an application.
